Charles Leños,

Duc de RICHEMONT, Comte de MARSH,
Baron de SHEDRINGTON.

M O N S E I G N E U R,

E prens la liberté de Vous presenter cet Ouvrage, qui est un Racourci de deux Langues Vulgaires, le François & l'Anglois. J'ai crû que je ne pouvois pas dedier plus à propos un Ouvrage de cette nature qu'à Vous, M O N S E I G N E U R, qui êtes un Abbregé de tout ce qu'il y a de parfait en votre âge & dans la France & dans l'Angleterre. Hercule étoit Hercule dans le berceau, & les grandes Ames ont dans l'enfance mêmes je ne sai quel brillant, qui ravit d'abord le monde en admiration. C'est cela mêmes, M O N S E I G N E U R, que l'on remarque déjà dans votre Personne. La Nature Vous a donné outre les graces du Corps un Esprit ravissant & capable de grandes choses, la Fortune Vous comble de Biens pour en venir à bout plus facilement, & la Renommée cette glorieuse Messagere des Heros s'impatiente de porter le bruit de vos Vertus par tous les coins de la Terre. Ainsi, MONSEIGNEUR, je laisse à penser quelle presse il y aura à Vous rendre ses respects, & quelle gloire à captiver votre bienvenillance. Pour moi, qui n'ai point de plus grande ambition que celle là, je Vous offre des à present avec un profond respect tout ce dont je suis capable. Et, parmi tant de Competiteurs qui travailleront à gagner vos bonnes graces, aiez la bonté de vous souvenir,

DEDICACE.

MONSEIGNEUR,

De votre tres humble & tres
obeissant Serviteur,

GUY MIEGE.

THE P R E F A C E TO The Reader,

Shewing the Necessity, Substance, and Method of this Work.

CHANGE, the common Fate of Sublunary things, is of all others That of living Languages, which sometimes are in a flourishing, and sometimes in a declining condition; there being always a sensible Alteration, which, as it is better or worse, doth either commend or discommend it to the World. As to the French, 'tis not very long since it was in a decaying condition, and wanted something to purge it from those ill humours it had contracted a great while. Therefore it was provided by Cardinal Richelieu, That an Academy of acute and judicious persons should be set up to correct and improve it. And accordingly there was an exact Inquiry made into such expressions as wanted amendments. Some improper Words they put out, and introduced others in their stead. They changed many Phrases, and fitted them better to the purpose and meaning of the matter. The French Orthography, formerly stuffed with so many superfluous letters, they brought as near the Pronunciation as could in reason be allowed. They lockt upon Transpositions and Parentheses in a continued Discourse as a tumbling block to the Reader, and made it their business to bring the French Tongue into the plainest Method. In a word, they have so judiciously corrected, refined, and improved it, that it is now become the darling Language of Europe. So sweet it is and pleasing to the ear, so very neat and curious in its expressions, so eloquent in its own genius and nature. Thus being brought to perfection by the said Academy, it is now left to their care to preserve it in its purity, and for the future to oppose the former rambling way and extravagant course of exploding, changing, intruding Words and Phrases. By all which contrivance and care it is now come to pass, that the French Tongue is in a manner grown Universal in Europe, but especially amongst the Gentile part of it. And of all Parts of Europe next to France, none is more so: d of it than England, whose Language is so much made up of the French, that (according to Mr. Howell in his Epistle upon Cotgrave) an English-man had need to study French to speak good.

good English. So that it is no wonder why the French Tongue should be so kindly received here among all Sorts of people.

To which I confess Mr. Cotgrave's Dictionary would have contributed a great deal more than it has, had it been any ways accommodated to our present Age. Which indeed is highly pretended to in the last Edition thereof, but so performed that the Title runs away with all the Credit of it. And indeed the Book is so far from being refined according to Cardinal Richelieu's Academy, as is pretended in the Title, that it swarms every where with Rank Words and Obsolete Phrases, savouring more of King Pharamonds Reign than that of Lewis XIV. So that I look upon Cotgrave as a good Help indeed for reading of old French Books (a thing which few people mind) but very insignificant either for reading of new ones, or speaking the Court-French, which is the Design of this Work.

Therefore I have indeavoured to do it as near as I could according to the present Use and modern Orthography. And, that you may know before hand how the same is performed, I shall make in short a previous Reflexion, first upon Words, and then upon Phrases, and Proverbs, and so proceed to the Method of this Book. There are two sorts of Words, Words in use, and Words not in use. The first are either Common, or High Words, or Terms of Art. Common Words are used by all people in generall that speak the same Language, High (or Choice) Words are most proper to Schollars and best educated persons, and Terms of Art are peculiar to those that profess or speak of any Art. The first two being the most current part of a Language, I have taken the more care not to omit any of them either in my French or English, and particularly, to take notice of those that are lately come to Use. And, as for Terms of Art, but especially Law-Terms, you will find here as great a Supply of them as can in reason be expected in such a Volume. Words not in Use are either Obsolete, or New-forced Words. Of the first sort some are so obliterated, worn out, and decayed, that they may very well be called the Rubbish of any Language. So that, both for neatness and brevity sake, I have willingly and freely omitted them. Wherein I imitate such as raise up a Building from its Ruins. They remove all the Rubbish, and lay aside whatever they find cumbersome and unserviceable. And what are those Antiquated and Cramp'd Words which make up a great part of Cotgrave, Words that offend the eyes and grate the ears, but the Rubbish of the French Tongue? 'Tis true that some obsolete Words are not so much out of date, but that they will pass sometimes; and, though not approved of by the generality, may be found nevertheless amongst some of our late Authors. These indeed, together with some New-coyned Words that in all probability will hardly come to Use, I have admitted here; but with a prefixed mark, to distinguish them thereby from current Words. But, because it is not enough for a compleat Dictionary to give an account of Words, unless one shews withall the use of them; therefore I have enriched this with great plenty of Phrases, according to the various acceptations of Words. So that there are few Property's of the French or English Tongue but you will find here, a Thing of great use both for the speaking and the reading part. Besides that, to season the naturall dulness of the Work, I have interwoven so many curious Descriptions and Observations, and inserted so many Proverbs both for diversion and use, that the Reading of it will be no less pleasing than usefull. And, because English Proverbs may probably take well both amongst English and Forainers, therefore I was the more free of them in my second Part. Where you may meet here and there a parcell of too severe ones against the female Sex, which I was myself not a little surprized at. For, though there be much of that humour in Outlandish Proverbs, yet I wondered to see them all outdone by a Nation where the Sex is so kindly used. Next to Proverbs, I am to give an account of my Method, whereby Derivatives are reduced to their Primitives. So that the Primitive go's as a Leading Word in Capitals, and its Derivatives that come after in smaller Characters. By which means one hath a curious and distinct Prospect of every Primitive, with all its Off-spring together. Which is certainly ly a great Conveniency, and must needs be a singular Help to the Learner, who finding by this means the Etymology of Words lying all along before him will easily master the Language. But, that nothing might be wanting on the other side, I have taken care however to put in the Derivatives in their Alphabetical Order, where they have a Star before them that leads you to the Primitive, which is to be found most times in the same page.

The greatest Help I have had for this Piece of Work, as to the French part of it, is Father Pomeys Dictionary Royall French and Latin, the newest and the best that is now extant in that way. But, as it is usuall in Things improvable of this kind, I have altered, added, and retrenched a great deal. And, as I differ from him besides in my Method, so I was resolved not to imitate him (as one might) by way of revenge in that ungentile Character he gives of Protestants, under the words Calviniste, Huguenot, &c. For, besides that a Dictionary is a most improper Book to make Declamations in, I thought it very unworthy of Christians to be ever barking at one another. But F. Pomey, though otherwise a man of good parts, is of another temper; and cannot so much as name a Calvinist, or a Huguenot, but he must presently fly out, scold at him, and call him by the name of Hereticus, Impius, Sacrilegus, as if either Wit or good Manners could find no better Latin to describe a Protestant.

I Conclude with a Request in the Printers behalf and my own, That the Reader would be so courteous as to connive at some Oversights of ours that he may meet withall here and there in the perusing of this Book. It is but common Civility so to do, and there is but Reason enough, considering how hard it is either to compose or to print a Book without faults.

Imprimatur,

Mart. 12. 1674.

Beauté (f.) beauty, handsomeness.

Beauté d'homme, a mans beauty.

Beauté de femme, a womans beauty.

La beauté est une juste proportion des parties, accompagnée d'une couleur agreable & de la grace, Beauty is nothing but a just proportion of the parts, with a good complexion, and a decent carriage.

C'est un enfant d'une vraie beauté, on ne peut rien voir de plus agreable que son visage. Il a le teint fort delicat, les yeux rians, les cheveux frisez, le corps bien fait, le naturel doux & charmant, & c'est ce qui lui gagne les cœurs de tous ceux qui le regardent : He is a Child of a real Beauty, and nothing can be seen more pleasing than his face.

His complexion is most delicate, his eyes smiling, his hairs curled, his body well shaped, his nature sweet and charming, which makes him to win the hearts of all those who look upon him.

Cette fille étoit belle, & cela paroisoit d'autant plus qu'il n'y avoit rien qui contribuât à relever sa beauté. Elle étoit déchevelée, nuds piés, toute en deordre, & si mal vêtue que, si sa beauté n'eust été extraordinaire, elle eust été étouffée par toutes ces choses ; She was a handsome maid, and it appeared the more to be so, because she had nothing to set off her beauty. She was disbevelled, bare-footed, quite out of order, and was in so mean a dress, that if her beauty had not been extraordinary, it had been smothered up with all these disadvantages.

La beauté de la Vertu n'est pas de celles qu'un petit accident efface, qu'une maladie flétrit, & que la vieillesse détruit. Sa beauté est hors des atteintes de tous ces maux, toujours fleurissante, toujours charmante, toujours aimable & adorable. Votre teint, charmante Vertu, ne perd jamais son éclat, ni vos yeux leurs attraits, ni votre bouche sa fraîcheur, ni votre front sa majesté, ni toutes les autres parties de votre corps leur justesse & leur bonne grace : The beauty of Virtue is none of those which a little mischance disfigures, a disease spoiles, and old age defaces. Her beauty is beyond the reach of all those evils, always flourishing, always charming, always amiable and adorable. Your complexion, so charming Virtue, doth never lose its clearness, nor your eyes their attractive power, nor your cheeks their fresh colour, nor your forehead its majesty, nor the other parts of your body their proportion or grace.

Il n'est point de beauté plus achevée que la vôtre, there is no greater beauty than your is.

Vos mains sont de la dernière beauté, your hands are incomparable.
